

Authors

Christopher Blattman
The University of Chicago

Robert Blair
Brown University

Alexandra Hartman
University College London

Yale University

Patterns of Conflict and Cooperation in Liberia (Part 1): Results from a Longitudinal Study

Robert Blair
Yale University

Christopher Blattman, PhD, MPA/ID
Yale University & IPA

Alexandra Hartman
Yale University

Acknowledgments: The research was supported via grants from the United Nations Peacebuilding Fund in Liberia (via UNMIL), Horowitz United, Yale University, the MacMillan Center, and the World Bank's Indirect Elections and Youth Trust Fund. We especially thank Jonathan Anderson, Maudou Ouedraogo, James Ruffalo, Wilfred Ory Johnson, Justin Haggis, Mattias Lundberg, Michael Klonowski, Tundele Semegye, Chuan Tshenchi and the Norwegian Refugee Council for their assistance. In addition, we received valuable comments on the research design and analysis from numerous scholars and practitioners, including participants in the Yale IPA and IDNY seminars. Finally, Bryan Fournier, Mik-Bok Sonstein, Brian Gosses, Richard Hill, Rebecca Liberman, Benjamin Mshoni, Anthony Sankoh, Guendalina Taylor, Prince Williams, and John Zeyuan provided superb research assistance. Cover photo: Liberian women on their way to market in Vongoma, Lofa County.

Patterns of Conflict and Cooperation in Liberia (Part 1): Results from a Longitudinal Study

Policymakers in Liberia face a dearth of evidence to guide their ambitious agenda of security sector reform, strengthening of property rights and the rule of law, and reconciliation. This lack of data is especially acute outside the capital and in areas where UN and police presence is limited.

October 25, 2011